Vetus-Crepitu von Finkeldor

Vetus-Crepitu von Finkledor, known at the time under a long-forgotten name, was born a human with the ability to use magick. Humans with magical abilities are hard to come by. Vetus was always warned of the dangers of using his gift throughout his early years by his mother. Humans who are able to use magick must always be sure to have a magical power source on them, for they aren't born with magical energy flowing through them like most other creatures on Danutu. If they fail to provide a power source for their spells, the spells will draw from their mind, body, and soul instead, slowly deteriorating them over time. Aside from that, Vetus and his mother lived on a small farm in the countryside of the Draco Kingdom. This human kingdom rebukes magick users and is currently waging war against the magical creatures across the planet. He was told to never use his powers in public for if he was caught, who knows what would happen. He spent most of his early years living in his mother's basement and sheltered from the outside world.

When he was 13 years old, his mother's farm was raided by bandits. Threatening his mother's life and stealing their crops, Vetus couldn't idly sit by and watch this happen. He used his power to fight back against the bandits and was able to drive them off. The victory was short-lived however as it wasn't long before the Draco army arrived to take Vetus away from his mother. He was taken to the castle's dungeon, and his magic use was restricted by a pair of cursed cuffs that were placed upon his wrists. Though these cuffs prohibited the free use of his magic, it could be harnessed by what the kingdom has dubbed a "Magick Keeper". These keepers wore a pair of similar cuffs that allowed them to control the enslaved magic users like puppets. The kingdom was building up an army of mages and using them to fight in their war with other magical creatures. After some training, most of Vetus' days were spent fighting against Elves, Spirits, and early on even the occasional Dragon before they were hunted to extinction. While he could feel the effects of using his magick so frivolously taking a toll on him, it was a slow process and was fairly manageable.

Over the decades Vetus had been spending most of his "free" time, meditating and working on a powerful incantation. Eventually, his incantation worked and he was able to destroy his cuffs. This spell took a lot out of him however, he could already feel himself wavering. As he began to make his escape he looked back upon all the other magic users who were wrongfully locked up in this place and knew he had to help them. Going cell to cell breaking the locks and using his powerful new incantation to remove their cuffs, Vetus was able to free the Draco Kingdoms' entire enslaved brigade. The other magic users were able to bust through the wall and make a run for it. Vetus however, was a husk of his former self. Using such a powerful spell over and over again took everything from him, and unraveled his mind, dwindling his sanity down to nothing. He sat on the ground, completely empty, appearing as though he aged another 50 years, repeating “free them…” to himself over and over again, for this is all that was left of his mind. One compassionate young mage took note of this before fleeing and realized he couldn’t just leave Vetus here in this state to be found (and presumably killed) by the guards in the morning. He guided Vetus out of the Draco Kingdom and now cares for him while dedicating his life to trying to find a way to undo the damage that Vetus’ magic has done to him.