Elizabeth Dépée

Elizabeth moved away from her parents in her preteen years, to train at Notre Dame, a prestigious combat academy. She trained at this school for many years and took her training very seriously. She very rarely spent her free time relaxing or trying to make friends. She was always training and silently observing her peers. It was during this time that she took note of how cruel some of the kids could be. Studying their cliques and how they would bully others, she felt the urge to do something about them. After watching them do something wrong to another student, she would openly challenge them to spar with her during class. Where she would then humiliate them in front of the rest of the students. Everybody at the school quickly got the message to not pick on anyone, out of fear of being caught by Elizabeth's watchful eye.

After graduating top of her class, she was thrown out into the wide-open world where suddenly she felt so small. She was able to make such a big difference in the behavior of the students at that school, but now she didn't have that anymore. So, she decided that she had to at least try and make that same difference in the rest of the world. So she became a vigilante hero, swiftly jumping from rooftop to rooftop watching the streets down below for injustice. If she sees a wrongdoer she will quickly leap into action, dropping down in front of them and proceeding to challenge them to a duel. She has yet to find an adversary who stands any match against her.
