Varick

Varick has always been a businessman, and all good businessmen, have a business partner. Varick's comes in the form of his life ling best friend, Vaun. Having grown up in the same orphanage together, they have always shared a very close bond. Varick and Vaun were both very clever and always figured out some kind of scheme to get by on. In their young adult years, the two eventually found themselves as part of a pirate crew. They both had a natural knack for piracy, leading to them rising through the ranks very quickly. So when the time came when their captain eventually kicked the bucket, Varick and Vaun rose up together and took co-control of the crew. They continued sailing the high seas and pirating well into their 40s, as all seemed well for them in this lifestyle. That is until one night under deck, where the crew was celebrating a fruitful plunder. Rum was being guzzled by the gallon and… mistakes were made. Mistakes happen all the time, the issue is when one party doesn't see it as a mistake. That night was the catalyst that caused Varick to realize, he wanted to straighten himself out and settle down. Varick and Vaun both decided to leave their pirating days behind them, and continue onto the next chapter in their life. Varick found himself a lovely wife named Ingrid, and settled down with her, using his piracy money to open up a tavern. Ingrid helps him run the tavern but, the real attraction is unbeknownst to her. The tavern has a secret backroom, where Varick sells very rare "acquired" artifacts from all over the world. This room is only known about by the "high-society", and nobles from around the world will discreetly travel to Varick's tavern to acquire these goods.